been engaging in special study for the been engaging in special study for the occasion.

It is believed that this is the first time the famous and popular Christmas oratorio has even been sung in El Paso with any degree of completeness. Different choirs from time to time have prepared portions of it for church use, and many most commendaable renditions have been given of certain parts. But El Pase has been slow to follow the custom, long established in most of the cities of this country and England, of making the oratorio a regular annual feature of the Christmas season. It is probable that the presentation of the music this Year will inaugurate a regular annual custom.

The chorus is in some respects the best ever organized here. It is as large as could possibly be used to advantage in any hall in El Paso, and it is made up almost exclusively of trained and experienced choir singers. In many cities the choruses formed for oratorio singing are not participated in large-ly by the regular choir singers. The cities the choruses formed for oratorio singing are not participated in largely by the regular choir singers. The willingness of the El Paso musicians to give their time and effort to this splendid public enterprise makes it possible to give the oratorio a rendering more finished in detail than is often heard, even in the largest cities.

A special effort should be made to interest the children and young folk in the Christmas oratorio. They will enjoy it, and intimacy with this heauti-
